

Air Operations Command

MISSION

Through Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance (ISR); through unmanned, remote-controlled vehicles such as the Predator and Reaper; through the Control System (AWACS), and other sources, the Air Force Reserve continuously collects huge amounts of data.

It is the job of the 701st Combat Operations Squadron at March Air Reserve Base in California and the 710th Combat Operations Squadron at Langley Air Force Base in Virginia to sift through all that information and provide summaries and briefings to the commanders responsible for national defense.

Air Operations Command provides many different kinds of jobs in strategy, combat planning, operations, ISR, communications, logistics and AFOR, which is essentially the “travel agent” for the rest of the command.

Benefits

In the Air Force Reserve, you are entitled to a wide range of benefits, similar to those on Active Duty.

- Earn a paycheck – The pay is competitive for part-time and some full-time jobs.
- Get an education – The Air Force Reserve encourages continuing education and offers several programs – Non-contributory Montgomery G.I. Bill, Tuition Assistance, free credits through the Community College of the Air Force (CCAF), and specialized training that can lead to certifications and licenses. There can also be bonuses and incentives for those going into critically needed areas.
- Low-cost health care plan – This new program applies to both the Reservist and immediate family and can significantly reduce the cost of medical care.
- Retirement plan – Military retirement programs are very generous. If you have previously served, your time counts toward your retirement in the Air Force Reserve.
- Commissary and BX Privileges – Military bases offer discounted and tax-free supermarket and department store shopping plus low-cost recreational vehicle rentals.
- Live and serve at home – Serve where you live and transfer to a new location only at your request.
- Maintain rank – If you have previously served in the Air Force or any other branch of the military, chances are you will retain your rank when you join the Air Force Reserve.
- Do the extraordinary – This is an opportunity to meet American heroes accomplishing amazing feats and to become one with them.

The Air Force Reserve is an integral part of the United States Air Force, performing approximately 20 percent of the work. Members of the Air Force Reserve can live and serve in their local communities. Although there are full-time opportunities, those in the Air Force Reserve can continue their full-time civilian careers. This is a great way to serve your country and still live at home with your family.
